PROCESSING NOTES

The collection was processed by Dena McDuffie between January 1996 and February 1997. First electronic version of the finding aid was created by Amy Rule, May 1997. Later accruals to the collection have been added at the end.

INTRODUCTION

Chicago photographer Mickey Pallas once said, "I never took a picture I wasn't paid for." While the motivation for his work may have been purely commercial, Pallas’ nostalgic images of 1950s America -- hula hoopers, picket lines, black church groups, smiling gas station attendants washing windshields, and stars the likes of Eartha Kitt and Jerry Lewis and Bill Haley -- have proved enduring. Today, Pallas' images not only provide documentation of a recent historical period, but wryly remind us of our own follies and foibles.
After nearly 20 years of storage, the Mickey Pallas Archive was a gift from Mickey and Pat Pallas to the Center for Creative Photography in 1995. The collection is still active. It contains 45 linear feet of correspondence; biographical information; exhibition announcements; clippings; publications; financial records for Gamma Photo Labs, the Center for Photographic Arts and Pallas Photographica Gallery (all founded by Pallas); negatives, study and contact prints, and transparencies; and other materials documenting the life and career of Mickey Pallas.

Little documentation exists regarding Pallas' early life nor about his personal life (except for a small collection of family photographs among his BIOGRAPHICAL AND PERSONAL FILES). The Archive is particularly rich in photographic materials, including an estimated 250,000 negatives and 8,000 contact sheets from 1945 to 1980.

The Mickey Pallas Archive was arranged into subgroups during the processing of the collection. The papers have been designated Archive Group (AG) 145. The archive group is divided first into boxes, then into folders. Thus, AG145:1/1 refers to the first folder in box 1. The papers are arranged by record type. Photocopies of newspaper clippings and other fragile papers have been provided for research use. The originals, which are encased in mylar sleeves in separate folders, should not be handled.

The Center for Creative Photography was able to process this material thanks in part to a grant from the Institute of Museum Services. This collection was processed by Dena McDuffie during the year beginning January 1996 and ending February 1997.

BIOGRAPHY

Mickey Pallas was the youngest of three children of Jewish Rumanian immigrants. His father David started out in America as a peddler, and never learned to read or write English. He owned a Rumanian restaurant on Chicago's West Side and was a wine merchant during Prohibition (Pallas recalled, "the police used to pull up in their cars and load them up with wine"). Pallas' mother, Jenny, was institutionalized (probably for depression) while Mickey was still an infant. He remembers visiting, with his sister Betty, his mother as a young boy. While growing up, he lived sometimes with his father, but also with his grandparents, Sarah and Moishe Pallas, who he called "Bubbe and Zaede." He has sweet memories of his grandparents, who were religious people. Mickey remembers going to the schvitz (traditional Jewish baths) with his grandfather. His sister Betty lived with their Aunt Rose (Mickey's father had three sisters: Rose, Pearl and Sophie); brother Louis lived with their grandparents.

In his early teens, Mickey was living with his father in a one-room apartment near the Marks Nathan Children's Home, a Jewish orphanage at Albany Avenue and 15th Street on Chicago's West Side. He observed life at the orphanage and, in 1929, moved there himself. The Home represented security and affection to Mickey. He lived there six years. While there, he learned to read and make music, sang as cantor in religious ceremonies, and was bar mitzvahed. While at Marks Nathan, Mickey joined the camera club and chipped in with another boy to buy a $1.25 Kodak camera. Mickey later recalled his experience at the Home as "the best thing that ever happened to me."

Residents at Marks Nathan attended Farragut High School; Pallas was among the 1934 graduates. It was the height of the Depression and opportunities were hard to come by. For the next ten years, Pallas held a number of jobs. He drove a truck for Manishewitz, sold insurance, ran a dry cleaning store, worked the assembly line for Studebaker (from 1941-1947, he chaired the Anti-Discrimination League of the United Auto Workers), was a labor organizer for CIO in the food and tobacco industry, and, in his spare time, led a band, "Mickey Pallas and his International Famous Orchestra." In 1937, he married fellow-Chicagoan Mildred Karp. Her family owned Karp's Deli at 16th Street and Homan in Chicago. During World War II, he volunteered for both the U. S. and British armies, but was rejected by both when a heart problem was detected during physical examination.

Mickey Pallas began his career as a commercial photographer in the mid 1940s when he bought a Speed Graphic camera and began doing freelance photographic work. His early work is typical of struggling photographers: babies, weddings and bar mitzvahs. Even these early images evidence the directness that became a trademark in Pallas' work. As his business became more successful, his subject matter became more sophisticated. Before long, Pallas counted Ebony and Sepia magazines, ABC-TV (most notably Studs Terkel's "Studs Place," and Morris B. Sachs' "Amateur Hour"), Standard Oil, Encyclopedia Britannica and the Harlem Globetrotters among his clients. Along the way, he met, photographed and befriended a number of well-known people: author Studs Terkel, cinematographer Haskell Wexler, fighter Joe Louis, and actor Ed Asner. Even when Pallas' subject matter was harsh, his images expressed the optimism that typified post-World War II America.

In 1959, displeased with the quality of photo processing available in the Chicago area, Pallas founded Gamma Photo Labs. Gamma began as a two-man operation and grew to 125 employees, quickly becoming one of the largest labs in the United States. When John F. Kennedy was killed in 1963, Gamma was headquarters for Life magazine's overnight photographic processing, resulting in the magazine's special issue covering the assassination. Once Gamma was on its feet, Mickey abandoned his commercial photography career and became a full-time businessman. In 1972, he sold Gamma to the Weiman Company; by then, Pallas was a wealthy man. With Gamma in his past and the finances to pursue his dreams, Pallas established a fine photography gallery in Chicago. Pallas opened the Center for Photographic Arts in Chicago in 1973. The Center contained an exhibition hall with 2,300 square feet of main galleries on the first floor and 1,000 square feet more available upstairs, a bookstore, darkrooms and a research library for Chicago photographers. Pallas' dream also included eventually establishing a photography school, a dream he never realized. Despite good publicity and sterling intentions, the Center lasted less than a year. Pallas estimated huge losses. (See BUSINESS AND FINANCIAL RECORDS: CENTER FOR PHOTOGRAPHIC ARTS for complete list of exhibitions. See also EXHIBITIONS FILES.)

In 1978, Pallas opened Pallas Photographica Gallery. The gallery represented works by, among others, Boubat, Brassai, Cameron, Coburn, Callahan, Curtis, Davidson, Drtikol, Evans, Felton, Genthe, Hine and Lartigue. (See BUSINESS AND FINANCIAL RECORDS: PALLAS PHOTOGRAPHICA GALLERY for complete list of exhibitions. See also EXHIBITIONS FILES.)

In 1979, Pallas suffered a stroke which left him temporarily without speech. At this time, operations of Pallas Photographica Gallery were apparently suspended. In 1984, a new gallery, Pallas Photo Gallery opened. This gallery was probably an appendage of Pallas Photo Labs, a business owned by Mickey's son, Rusty Pallas.

In 1980, Pallas hired Janet Ginsburg, a student at Indiana University, to help bring order to the vast archive of work he had created during the course of his commercial career. After graduation, Ginsburg supervised the completion of the project. She later put together a portfolio of photographs in an effort to secure an exhibition. In 1986 she co-curated (with Kenneth Burkhart of the Chicago Office of Fine Arts) Mickey Pallas: Photographs 1945-1960, the first retrospective exhibition of Pallas' work. Ginsburg began researching appropriate institutions for the possible placement of the archive, and in the early 1990s contacted the Center for Creative Photography. After Pallas’ death in 1997, Ginsburg continued to be actively involved in managing and promoting his work.

In 1985, after a long struggle with cancer, Millie Pallas died. After Millie’s death, while traveling in France with his daughter Gail, Mickey met Patricia Zimmerman, a vice-president for Citibank. The following year, they were married in Chicago. Pat later recalled, "Mickey swept me off my feet." In 1986, the couple moved to Palm Springs where they lived until mid-1997. In later years, Pallas’ photographs largely consisted of family snapshots. Mickey and Pat moved to Scottsdale, Arizona, in 1997, and it was there that he died.

In a tribute to Pallas published in the exhibition catalog for his 1986 retrospective, Studs Terkel observed 'Ever on the go, Mickey, with the gait and the build of a club fighter, was deceptively good. So good, that he captured, indelibly, a piece of our history." Pallas’ success story is typical of the entrepreneurial attitudes of many first-generation Americans. And, as he recently reminisced, he "had a lot of fun."

GENERAL CORRESPONDENCE FILES, 1959-1995
Letters, postcards and greeting cards written to Pallas, including correspondence with businesses, employees, friends and others. Many of the letters are testimonials, either to Gamma Photo Labs or to Pallas himself (most of the testimonials to Pallas were generated in preparation for the exhibition catalog for the retrospective "Mickey Pallas: Photographs 1945-1960"). There is very little correspondence of a personal nature. There are no outgoing letters written by Mickey Pallas. Incoming correspondence is arranged chronologically (fraction of a linear foot).

BIOGRAPHICAL AND PERSONAL FILES, ca. 1920 - ca. 1990,
Includes materials relating to Pallas' life such as newspaper and magazine clippings, photographs, promotional articles about Pallas written by Janet Ginsburg, birthday cards, etc. (1.5 linear feet)

AG145:1/7  Personal-General
AG145:1/8  Personal-Marks Nathan Children's Home: Although his parents were still alive, Pallas lived at the Children's Home (an orphanage for Jewish children) for six years approximately ages 12 to 18) during the Depression. His memories of the Home were very positive and he collected articles chronicling its existence. His feelings were also evident in his work which often depicts children and orphanages.

Pallas maintained a friendship with photographer W. Eugene Smith. File contains 8 x 10 black-and-white glossies of Gene Smith by Pallas; one color contact sheet and seven black-and-white glossy prints of Gene Smith; brochure for A Portfolio of Photographs by W. Eugene Smith, inscribed to Pallas from Smith.

Documentation of a loan from Pallas to Smith, 1977

AG145:2 Portraits of Mickey Pallas and Pallas family. Photographic portraits of Pallas and family dating from childhood snapshots to present day: Black-and-white photographs and negatives. Includes portraits of Pallas by Herbert Nipson, Gerry Swart, Nikki Arai, Bhupendra Karia and Martha Phillips. Also portraits of Mickey Pallas by Dick Krueger (negatives and contact sheets), 1975. Also, black-and-white 5 x 7-inch photographs documenting Pallas' 1967 trip to Southeast Asia.

AG145:3 Photographic portraits of Pallas and family: color photographs, negatives and contact sheets.

Although Mickey Pallas had hundreds of commission assignments, he rarely retained any documentation of them. Project Files contains documentation of two assignments. In 1956, Pallas and author Robert Seaver traveled to Cuba on assignment for Playboy magazine. In Havana, they reported on the work of Hungarian/Cuban sculptor Sepy Dobronyi who was director of the Cuban Art Center and who had recently completed a sculpture of actress Anita Ekberg which was featured in a subsequent Playboy article. (see PUBLICATIONS, August 1956 Playboy and November 1956 Art & Photography) While there, they also met and photographed the works of Cuban sculptor Juan Sierra. Pallas and Seaver toured Cuba and Haiti and their trip is well documented in Pallas' photographic materials. During the 1950s, Pallas traveled with the Harlem Globetrotters basketball teams, chronicling their activities.

AG145:4/15  Sepy Dobronyi [Hungarian/Cuban sculptor]: Cuban Art Center brochure (photos by Pallas); Cubana de Aviacion airline ticket; Cuban tourist card issued to Pallas; photograph of Pallas, Dobronyi, Robert Seaver (author of Playboy article about Dobronyi and Art & Photography article about Pallas) and Dobronyi's sculpture of actress Anita Ekberg

Receipts and bills, correspondence, tax returns [restricted], check registers, canceled checks, bank statements, savings account records, ledgers, and insurance records relating to Pallas' business expenses. Other types of research materials found in the collection include financial records pertaining to personnel and taxes. These are restricted due to privacy considerations. The material is arranged as follows: (1.5 linear feet)
Gamma Photo Labs: In 1959, disgusted with the quality of photo processing in the Chicago area, Pallas founded Gamma Photo Labs on Superior Street. Pallas’ wife Millie helped in the operations and the business grew steadily. By the early 1960s, Gamma was a success. Mickey abandoned his commercial photography career and became a full-time businessman. In 1972, he sold Gamma to the Weiman Company. The business still prospers, under the name Gamma Photo Labs, in Chicago.

Center for Photographic Arts (1973): Pallas had dreamed for many years of pioneering a photography gallery in Chicago. After the sale of Gamma, he founded the Center for Photographic Arts at 319 W. Erie Street. The Center, housed in an old warehouse, was typical of galleries of its day: loft-like spaces with stark white exhibit areas and lots of rough wood. It was made up of an exhibition hall with 2,300 square feet of main galleries on the first floor and 1,000 square feet more available upstairs, a bookstore, darkrooms and a research library for Chicago photographers. In October and November 1973, the Center hosted an 8-week film series; each week featured a different film and commentary by one of eight Chicago film critics. Pallas also envisioned eventually establishing a photography school. The Center lasted less than a year; Pallas estimated huge losses. (See also OTHER MATERIALS, Audiotapes, Interviews)

List of exhibitions staged at the Center for Photographic Arts in 1973:
March 1-April 20: Grand opening exhibition, The Concerned Photographer 2, produced by Cornell Capa and shown only in Tel Aviv prior to the Center for Photographic Arts. The exhibition featured 200 prints by eight photographers (Bruce Davidson, Ernst Haas, Hiroshi Hamaya, Donald McCullin, Gordon Parks, Marc Riboud, W. Eugene Smith and Roman Vishniac).

April 6-June 2: Jacques Henri Lartigue and Victor Skrebneski.

June 7-July 21: Lewis Hine and Torkel Korling [NOTE: During June 1974, movie critic Roger Ebert hosted a 6-week course, "How to Read a Movie," at the Center.].

Aug. ?-Sept. 15: Walker Evans and Bruce Davidson.

Oct. ?-Nov. 3: Playboy.

Nov. 10-Dec. 8: Andre Kertesz, Doug Prince, Emmet Gowin.

Pallas Photographica Gallery: In 1978, Pallas again attempted to establish a fine photography gallery in Chicago. He opened Pallas Photographica Gallery at 315 West Erie Street, next door to Pallas Photo Labs, which had recently been established by Pallas' son, Rusty. [See also AG33:6/48, "W. PHOTOGRAPHIC MATERIALS, 1940-1980

The bulk of the Pallas Archive falls into this category which contains study prints, contact sheets, negatives and transparencies made throughout Pallas' career as a commercial photographer. Photographic materials found in the collection include approximately 250,000 negatives, mostly black-and-white (ca. 1945-1980) and roughly 9,000 contact sheets. Negatives and contact sheets are organized using a "twin-check numbering system" in which each contact sheet has a five-digit number which corresponds to the number on a specific negative packet. This system was developed around 1985 as part of a project initiated by Pallas to contact print the entire negative collection. [NOTE: contact sheets in the collection without twin-check numbers are vintage.
contact sheets, made by Pallas while working on specific jobs. All are duplicated somewhere among the twin-check-numbered contacts. As a result of this project, approximately 95 percent of the collection is contact printed. It is unusual (and wonderful) to have an artist's work as thoroughly documented or as accessible as the Mickey Pallas'. (35.5 linear feet)

These materials came to the Center for Creative Photography in roughly numerical order (according to the twin-check system) and have been arranged numerically and according to format. In order to provide better access to images, an inventory has been developed (see Inventory, Appendix D). When available, each inventory entry contains information about the client, subject matter and date. For example, a researcher looking for images made by Pallas in his work for Standard Oil might search the inventory using the keywords "Standard Oil." Every hit listed would include a five-digit number (the twin-check number). The researcher could then look at the corresponding contact sheet (which would have the same number) to study the image. If the researcher then determined he/she needed a print of that image or wanted to study the negative, the same number could be located among the negatives to locate that image.

In the inventory, negative size is indicated as follows: "^" indicates 35mm or 120 mm negatives; "+" indicates 5 x 7-inch or larger. In addition, entries marked with "*" indicate images designated by one-time Pallas assistant Janet Ginsburg as "often-used" Pallas photographs. Missing negatives are listed by number, but entry information is absent.

INVENTORY (See Appendix D)

CONTACT SHEETS, ca. 1945-1980

Black-and-white contact sheets covering Pallas' career as a commercial photographer. Contact sheets are filed using a "twin-check numbering system" in which each contact sheet has a 5-digit number which corresponds to the 5-digit number on a specific negative packet. (13 linear feet, approximately 8,000 contact sheets) See also "negatives."

NEGATIVES, ca. 1945-1980

Includes primarily black-and-white 35mm and 120mm, but some 5 x 7-inch and 8 x 10-inch negatives are also included. Negatives are filed using a "twin-check numbering system" in which each contact sheet has a 5-digit number which corresponds to the 5-digit number on a specific negative packet. Due to time constraints imposed on this project, the majority of negatives have not been archivally housed. Differentiations between processed and unprocessed negatives are noted below. Also noted is information pertaining to the size of each negative. Negative size is indicated as follows: "^" indicates 35mm or 120 mm negatives; "+" indicates 5 x 7-inch or larger. (12 linear feet, approximately 250,000 negatives) See also "contact sheets."

AG145:38  negatives, numbered 06091-06278 (processed, ^)
A number of envelopes were found in the Archive containing negatives and contact sheets. Although some of the negative packets are numbered, these are not part of the twin-check numbering system. The majority of photographs appear to be ca. 1970-1980 noncommercial photographs. The majority is 35mm, and some are in 35mm panorama format. When information was included on the envelopes, that information has been photocopied and included in each folder with the appropriate negative and contact sheets. Indicated below are people and places identified in these contact sheets.

AG145:74     W. Eugene Smith in his studio; Cornell Capa; Mickey, Millie, Rusty, Gail Pallas and grandchildren; Prague; Paris; Dr. Karl Menninger; Gamma Photo Labs

AG145:75     W. Eugene Smith; Kingston Trio; Harry Belafonte; Bruce Davidson; Cornell Capa; Kay Reese

TRANSPARENCIES, ca. 1945-1980

The majority of the transparencies, many originally stored by Pallas in cigar boxes, portray largely noncommercial subjects such as family and personal travel. Most of the slides are by Pallas, although this collection also includes commercially-produced slides of Hong Kong. All transparencies have been rehoused in archival materials, but have not been inventoried. AG145:82 contains black-and-white slides of Pallas' tear sheets, and may have been used as portfolio material. Virtually all other transparencies are in color. Another group of transparencies, housed in AG145:84, was found among Pallas' papers, but the subject matter and composition suggest that this is not Pallas' work. (3 linear feet)

AG145:76-84  Miscellaneous transparencies

STUDY PRINTS, ca. 1945-1965

Prints made by Pallas in the course of his career as a commercial photographer. Includes work for Standard Oil, ABC-TV (Studs Place and Studs Terkel, Super Circus, Morris B. Sachs, Dean Martin, Jerry Lewis), photos of Count Basie, fighter Joe Louis, the Chicago Chicks baseball team, Big Bill Broonzey's funeral, Walter Poepke and Mahalia Jackson. (7.5 linear feet)

AG145:85     Miscellaneous study prints

Oversize: 39.5 x 30-inch print of crowd of union strikers, some holding picket signs; print is signed "Mickey Pallas 1952"; mounted on heavy cardboard, dinged and scratched and soiled

22.5 x 36.5-inch print of oil rig at stormy sea [probably Standard Oil assignment]; mounted on 24.5 x 39.5-inch heavy white cardboard, dinged and scratched and soiled
OTHER MATERIALS, ca. 1940-1980
Films and audio and visual tapes and miscellaneous artifacts that comprise part of the archive. Arranged according to format.
(10 linear feet)

Audiotapes, interviews: two reel-to-reel tapes of interviews with Pallas promoting the Center for Photographic Arts, both conducted in 1974.

AG145:86 1) Interview conducted by George Robinson from Chicago Public Schools' "WBEZ Student Workshop on the Air," recorded 18 April 1974; aired 29 April 1974 (one 7-inch sound reel tape, 15:13 minutes). Pallas discusses his career as a photographer, the Center for Photographic Arts (exhibitions, photographers, programs), Gamma Photo Labs, and plans to turn Gamma building into school of photography

2) Interview conducted by Yuri Resovsky from The Radio Workshop, June or July 1974 (one 7-inch sound reel tape). Pallas discusses his childhood including his experience at the Marks Nathan Children's Home; and his work experience before becoming a photographer; upcoming shows, philosophy, programs and the physical plant at the Center for Photographic Arts; and his work on a 1973 film on the Harlem Globetrotters, shot for Wide World of Sports (Pallas did both film and stills and was not pleased with the finished product)

Audiotapes, entertainment: Twenty-seven reel-to-reel tapes, some commercially made and some homemade, of largely jazz, classical and popular music, with a smattering of opera.

Films: twenty-three films largely depicting Pallas family life. Many of these films are in very poor condition; many are spliced with scotch tape, spliced in opposite directions, etc. The condition of these films makes it impossible to view them. However, during the course of this project, fifteen of these films were duplicated on videotape in order to make some movies available to family members. Duplicated films are marked "[reference copy available]."
