Abstract

Collection contains papers, photographic materials, artwork and ephemera circa 1951-2012 of Gordon Bennett (1933-2012) collector, dealer, photographer and publisher. A pioneer collector of 19th and 20th century photography and advocate for vernacular photography, he discovered a complete set of Carleton E. Watkins’ New Series mammoth prints, the only known set to survive the 1906 San Francisco earthquake. Bulk of collection records his collecting activities: purchases, donations, sales and loans to galleries and institutions. The remainder consists of Bennett’s personal photographs negatives, art work and exhibition records. A small group of papers document his fine art poster publishing venture, Homestead Productions. A few personal papers record his education, Air Force service, and awards.

Biographical/ Historical Note

Gordon Lynn Bennett was born April 1, 1933 in Decatur, Tennessee. From childhood Bennett had an interest in photography and art. Following his high school graduation in 1951, he attended East Tennessee State University until 1953. Bennett joined the United States Air Force and served from 1953-1957. While in the Air Force he worked in the darkroom for the first time. Following his discharge he took a position with the Curry Company, managing a transportation and touring office in Yosemite Valley. While there he saw and was inspired by the work of Ansel Adams.

During 1957-1958 Bennett studied painting and drawing at the Chouinard Art Institute in Los Angeles, earning a B.A. His first formal study of photography began as a graduate student at San Francisco State College in 1960. While there, Bennett was a student of John Gutmann and Jack Welpott and in 1964 earned an
M.A. in Art with an emphasis in photography. He had his first one man show at the San Francisco Museum of Art in 1964.

During the 1960’s Bennett worked at a variety of jobs, teaching art in the San Francisco Public Schools, supervising photography facilities at San Francisco State and photographing gallery installations and artists’ works. In 1971 he taught briefly at SF Art Institute but decided to leave photography and began working in collage and assemblage.

Bennett was a lifelong artist, photographer, photography collector and dealer. While in college he began collecting vernacular photographs and over the years amassed a collection of 19th and early 20th century photographs that influenced curators, museum collections and enriched the history of photography. Bennett persuaded museum curators that vernacular photography was a legitimate subject for study. Over the years he loaned prints from his collections to museums, institutions and publications.

His most important discovery occurred in 1967 when he found two complete disbound albums of 19th century photographer Carleton E. Watkins’ New Series mammoth-plate prints of Yosemite and California Missions. The albums were unique, having survived the 1906 San Francisco earthquake and destruction of Watkin’s studio. In 1973 Bennett exhibited the 76 prints at Focus Gallery, San Francisco, thought to be the first exhibition of Watkin’s work since his death in 1916. Over the years he resisted offers to sell individual prints because he was committed to keeping the sets together. Bennett stated that he wished that them to be kept together and eventually placed in an institution particularly receptive to Watkins work. The California Mission set was ultimately placed in Special Collections at the University of California, Los Angeles. Bennett retained the Yosemite New Series for over thirty years after its discovery, occasionally lending prints out for exhibition. On April 28, 2004 Bennett sold the New Series, 40 mammoth plate photographs of Yosemite, at auction at Sotheby’s, New York. He donated his remaining collection of over 1,000 images to San Francisco Museum of Modern Art.

Bennett worked on personal photography projects throughout his adult life. Working in 35mm and 4” x 5” formats he exhibited and sold his work. He stated that his photographs “must have an element of mystery” and hoped that “the image evokes meanings on several levels, not only the literal but also on that of the symbolic and the enigmatic”. He later incorporated “found” vernacular photographs into collages. During the 1990s he gave up collecting to concentrate on his personal art and photography. He received a Marin Arts Council Individual Artist Fellowship for non-traditional media in 1991 and an Individual Artist
Fellowship for sculpture in 1996. His works are in the collection of major museums in the United States.

In 1971 Bennett pioneered a publishing company, Homestead Productions that produced posters from the fine art photography of Imogen Cunningham, Wynn Bullock, and other California photographers.

Gordon Bennett died of a heart attack on November 25, 2012 at age 79 in Oakwood, Georgia.

Scope and Content Note

The Gordon Bennett papers document Bennett’s careers as a dealer, collector and artist. The bulk of the collection contains records of sales, auctions and purchases of photographs, some photocopies of his collection, loan records, appraisals and donations. There is extensive documentation of his 1999 donation of the bulk of his collection to the San Francisco Museum of Modern Art and the appraisal and sale of the Carleton Watkins Yosemite New Series, including the Sotheby’s catalog. By the 1990s
Bennett had decided to focus on his own art career and the collection documents his exhibitions, grants and works purchased by museums and contains his negatives, photographs, photographs of his exhibitions and collages. A small group of materials document his fine art photography poster publishing venture, Homestead Productions, established in 1971. There are a few personal papers documenting his education and military service, but no personal correspondence.

Series one, Biographical, 1951-2012, contains education records, Master’s thesis, military records, portraits, resumes, interviews, awards and Bennett’s obituary.

Series two, Activities, contains two subseries: Dealer and Collector Activities and Personal Art Career. Subseries Dealer and Collector Activities (1960-2010) contains correspondence, inventories, auction records, donation records, appraisals, tax records, research and receipts. Folder titles assigned by Bennett and grouped alphabetically by artists, subject, institutions to whom he loaned, donated or sold photographs, and the auction houses at which he purchased or sold works. Of note are his research materials on Carleton Watkins and catalog of Sotheby’s sale, appraisals of his collections and itemized donation to the San Francisco Museum of Modern Art. Subseries Personal Art Career (1962-2007) documents his art and photography. Materials including clipping books, exhibition records and reviews, grants, contracts, prints, transparencies, negatives and publications containing his work. The appendix has a listing of Bennett’s art exhibitions. The final subseries on Homestead Productions (1971- ) contains a small group of materials documenting Bennett’s publishing venture with business partner Edward Kitson. Included are advertising materials, posters and artist contracts signed by Bullock, Cunningham, and other California photographers.

Series three consists of publications containing reproductions of Bennett’s photographs and a few books from his personal library, one annotated.

Series four, Photographic Materials includes Bennett’s negatives and transparencies, photographic prints by and of Bennett, photographic collages by Bennett, photocopies of his work and others and a small group of vernacular photographs collected by Bennett.
